Antiques are Green!

Antiques and collectibles are wonderful items. With so many people becoming aware of eco-friendly products and the environment, we are delighted to praise antiques for doing their part by simply being what they are – antiques! You won't find harmful toxins being released from antique furniture due to their organic nature.

Antiques are the ultimate form of recycling. Not only are you not buying something new, let's not forget the quality and value of antiques. Compare the craftsmanship of antiques and collectibles to new retail items. You can often purchase an antique for less or comparable value as buying new. You also get the added benefit of passing down these items to future generations to create your own family heirlooms and memories.

What's old is new again! Antiques and collectibles are an excellent source for the crafter, recycler and to repurpose. Antique lovers have been using their finds in a variety of exciting ways long before it became popular! Old watering cans can spruce up and accent your garden. The beads from an old broken necklace can be glued onto a frame or re-strung into a new piece. The possibilities are endless.

We hope you will do your part and we invite you to visit us as a source for antique and collectible inspiration! Go green with antiques!
